Google Ventures Puts $258M Into Uber, Its Largest Deal Ever

ALEX WILHELM ALEXIA TSOTSIS

Thursday, August 22nd, 2013 81 Comments

A Certificate Of Incorporation unearthed by AllThingsD today shows that Uber has closed $361.2 million in its latest round. It's unknown why TPG, which picked up 775,092 shares, paid a lower per-share price than the other participants. The late-stage investor plunked down a total of $88.4 million in Uber. Existing investor Benchmark put in another $15 million in this round.

Lyft Lifts $60 Million From Andreessen Horowitz, Gives 30,000 Rides A Week A Year After Launch

RYAN LAWLER

Thursday, May 23rd, 2013 30 Comments

It was almost one year ago (to the day!) that my colleague Kim Mai-Cutler wrote our first story on Lyft, and how the company was going to offer some lower-priced competition to on-demand ride leader Uber in San Francisco. Now, 366 days later, Lyft is celebrating the anniversary of that launch with some huge news: It's raised a $60 million round of financing led by Andreessen Horowitz.

The new funding will give Lyft a huge shot in the arm as it plans to expand aggressively both in

Car Rental Company Avis To Buy Zipcar For $500 Million

ALEXIA TSOTSIS

Wednesday, January 2nd, 2013 15 Comments

Car rental company Avis has announced its intent to scoop up car-sharing company Zipcar for $500 million, with the acquisition expected to close in the Spring of 2013, according to a press release. Zipcar itself went public in April 2011.

"By combining with Zipcar, we will significantly increase our growth potential, both in the United States and internationally, and will position our company to better serve a greater variety of consumer and commercial transportation needs," said Avis CEO Ronald L. Nelson in the announcement.

Google Bought Waze For $1.1B, Giving A Social Data Boost To Its Mapping Business

INGRID LUNDEN

Tuesday, June 11th, 2013 99 Comments

After months of speculation, the fate of Waze, the social-mapping-location-data startup, is finally decided: Google is buying the company, giving the search giant a social boost to its already-strong mapping and mobile businesses. Speculation has had the sale at $1 billion to $1.3 billion, and so far there is no price on the deal, but a source tells TechCrunch that it was done for $1.1 billion.

Getaround Raises $13.9M Series A Led By Menlo Ventures, Launches Getaway For Managed Car Rentals

RYAN LAWLER

Thursday, August 2nd, 2012 28 Comments

Peer-to-peer car sharing service — and former TechCrunch Disrupt winner — Getaround just raised $13.9 million in new funding to expand into new markets and improve its product. It's also rolling out a new product called Getaway that will let users who never use their cars to rent them out for months at a time, with Getaround managing rentals and handling all maintenance.

RelayRides Acquires Wheelz To Boost Inventory And Improve Hardware For Its Peer-To-Peer Car Rentals

RYAN LAWLER

Tuesday, May 14th, 2013 5 Comments

There's consolidation afoot in the peer-to-peer car rental space. San Francisco-based RelayRides, which launched about five years ago and is now available nationwide, has gobbled up fledgling competitor Wheelz. That includes all the assets, IP, and about 10 employees from Wheelz, which launched about a year-and-a-half ago.

Ride-Sharing Startup SideCar Raises $10 Million From Lightspeed And Google Ventures To Expand Into New Markets

RYAN LAWLER

Wednesday, October 10th, 2012 6 Comments

Ride-sharing has become extremely popular in San Francisco, as a couple of startups have emerged to offer low-priced transportation alternatives to taxis and Ubers all around town. So far, Lyft has been getting most of the attention here, thanks to its flashy pink mustaches driving around town and its company culture. But competitor SideCar will likely be the first startup in the space to expand outside the Bay Area, and it's raised quite a bit of funding to do so.

Uber Rival Hailo Reportedly Set To Close $30M Funding Round As It Expands In The U.S.

CATHERINE SHU

Monday, December 24th, 2012 2 Comments

London-based mobile taxi network Hailo is set to close a $30 million round of funding as it sets its sights on the U.S. market, reports AllThingsD. The Series B funding round is likely being led by Fred Wilson of Union Square Ventures. Earlier this year, Hailo raised a $17 million round of series A financing led by Accel Partners.

According to AllThingsD's sources, the new round values Hailo at about $140 million, a discount from Uber which was valued at more than twice that amount when it closed $32 million in Series B funding one year ago.

Social Bicycles Raises $1.1 Million To Expand Bike Sharing Project

JOHN BIGGS

Wednesday, May 1st, 2013 0 Comments

Bike sharing service Social Bicycles has raised $1.1 million to expand the reach of their social bike sharing service to new markets. The company, led by Ryan Rzepecki, reported the funding this morning.

The round was led by David Rose on behalf of New York Angels as well as Esther Dyson, Amol Sarva, and Karl Ulrich. David Rose and Brad Higgins will be on the company board.

The company, founded in 2011, began as a Kickstarter project and then turned into a solid rental product with a pilot launch at the San Francisco airport in December and another pilot at the University of Buffalo in March.
